5.1 Conclusion

The result of the research analysis shows the answer to the problem related in chapter 1 which are: The first what are pivot grammar found in the pupils utterances at At-taqwa playgroup, the second what are the meaning of the utterances contain pivot grammar produced by the pupils, and the third how do pupils in at- taqwa playgroup produce sentences in the form of pivot grammar. The following is presented to answer the first problem using the theory.

The pivot grammar used by pupil's utterance in age two to three years old is in fact not known by many pupils. By recording and analyzing the conversation they use everyday. The pivot grammar has pivot class and open class. It have function words and content words.

In reality, there are many activities that do by most pupils in the At-taqwa playgroup used pivot grammar, for example kakak makan, aku hijau etc. These words are pivot grammar part of Indonesian language. Then, analyses to meaning and describe about utterances use pivot grammar.

Finally, the writer concludes that there are 35 utterances analyzed. Those utterances from the pupils at At-taqwa playgroup age two to three years old. In the kinds of the pivot grammar mostly use pivot and open class have function and content word. Then, the meaning and describe of utterances produced by pupils in meaningless.

5.2 Suggestion

After doing the analysis of the research, The researcher hopes very much this analysis can function and encourage acknowledgement of people to do some analysis, either for other data resources. Especially for student of English department to study more about linguistic, especially grammar. And the thesis is being studied for the researcher to learn more about linguistic, now the researcher knows about linguistic and many kind of study which utterances pupils in playgroup. The researcher expects to other researcher to analyze the other esthetic side of pivot grammar, and wishes to experts of this cases to give their suggestion and opinion, because the researcher realizes this thesis is still far from perfection, but the researcher tries to do the best in arranging this thesis.
