

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION

After analyzing the data which are taken from short messages by texting, the study will be concluding in this chapter. There are 3 points that concluded as the concluding below based on the statement of the problems in the previous chapter.

From the first statement of the problems, it can be concluded that conversational maxims are mostly flouted by participants (senders and receivers) in the short messages are maxim of quantity. In the other hand, the conversational maxims are slightly flouted by participants (senders and receivers) in the short messages are maxim of manner. It can be seen in the number of flouting in chapter 4.

The second statement of the problems, it can also be concluded that in maxim of quantity, the participants flout it by adding more information, but there is one conversation which gives a little information. Next, in maxim of quality, all of the participants flout it by saying that they believe false. After that, in maxim of relevance, the participants flout it by saying irrelevant. The last, in maxim of manner, the participants flout it by saying convoluted words and extremely long-winded.

The third statement of the problems, it can be concluded that in maxim of quantity, they flout because they want to show off about their condition to interlocutor, they want to clarify the information that they give for other people, they also want to be appraised more polite by giving more information when they talk with elder, and they want to hide the information by reducing information. Moreover, in maxim of quality, they flout because they want to create humor for melting the atmosphere of conversation. After that, in maxim of relevance, they flout because they want to other people imagine what they do not say or they want to other people conclude what they said. The last, in maxim of manner, they flout because they want to hide their feeling because of they are shy, They want to other people imagine what they do not say or they want to other people conclude what they said, they want to refuse other people request by saying convoluted words and the words are extremely long-winded long.

Furthermore, after doing the analysis, that all of the statements of the problems are answered is concluded. He suggests the reader to conduct the resarch in other types of people who have high social status, one of which is within be capacity of a politician for the comparison studies in the future.
