

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 Conclusion

The result of the analysis describes the register used by convection workers in Babat Lamongan. The writer obtained by using descriptive qualitative research. In addition, the result of the research analysis shows the answer to the problem related in chapter I, which are; “What are some registers used by the convection workers in Babat Lamongan?” and “Why are the registers used by the convection workers in Babat Lamongan?”

The result of the research analysis shows that the convection workers use some register to communicate with other convection workers. Some registers used by convection workers are kerangan, bulanan and sepatu (the parts of sewing machine), pis and yar (the sizes of the fabric), afdruk and ngelabur (the processes of printing/sablon), indosol, binder, emul sifir and sandey (kinds of basic paint), neci, ngobras, operdek, itik'i, benik'i, nyegrek'i, ngawak'i and guloni (divisions of sewing), alusan, oxport and mella (brands of the fabric), bangkik (small pleat of the shirt), and ngepres (modern printing). Some registers in conversations of convection workers can be collected in styles of register by Broderick (1976) (formal, consultative, casual and intimate). However, in the conversations by convection workers, the writer does not find the statements or utterances that containing frozen register because the language pattern has established.

The convection workers use some register to make the conversation efficient when they communication. The register used based on situations in which the communication happens. They used the registers when they talk about process of sewing, process of printing and other similarly. In addition, the most interesting is the convection workers use language pattern in the same way. This is because most of the members in convection are from family members or relatives and friend. Therefore, there is no different between the language pattern used by the workers and the manager.

5.2 Suggestion

According to the conclusion, the writer has realized that this research not perfect enough. It caused by her limited knowledge, reference and time. The writer hopes that this research could be expand to knowledge of sociolinguistics, especially register. The writer also suggest to the other researcher to make better a research of similar topic.